

Weapons Crib Sheet Introduction

This file completely updates the ranges and AT values for all weapons currently in Focused Firepower to the new format. The ranges for small arms, IDF weapons and field guns are now dealt with differently, and so have slightly different tables. Please note that some weapon data is incomplete, particularly amongst the Soviet weapons. If you can find any information to fill in the gaps, please let me know so that I can update the information in this document.

The tables for small arms, such as rifles and machine guns, indicate the maximum range in inches for each range bracket for that weapon. For example, a German MG34 has a medium range of 30, meaning that targets up to 30" away are within medium range for that weapon.

Due to the way that IDF is scattered depending on the distance to target, IDF weapons, such as mortars, indicate a minimum and maximum range in inches. A weapon showing a minimum range cannot fire at a target point within the minimum range, nor outside the maximum range

It is in the field and tank guns that the biggest change comes. The tables for these weapons do not indicate a range in inches for each range band, but instead they have specific ranges shared by all such weapons, from Point Blank to Extreme. The tables indicate the AT value for each shell, for each weapon, in each of these range bands. Many weapons also list a Maximum range that is used when firing HE rounds in an indirect fire capacity. Note that the HE rounds can also be fired at targets within the Point Blank to Extreme range bands using the rules for Direct Fire HE. The table below shows the range in inches for each range band, and also shows the real world distance that they represent.

Point Blank	Short	Medium	Long	Extra Long	Extreme
5" (100m)	25" (500m)	50" (1000m)	75" (1500m)	100" (2000m)	125" (2500m)
